

SEA WARFARE 1939-1945

by Captain
Donald Macintyre, D.S.O., D.S.C.

Captain Donald Macintyre, D.S.O., D.S.C.

One of Britain's most respected naval historians and the author of numerous books on maritime history and the naval events of World War II, trained and served as a pilot with the Fleet Air Arm and during World War II became one of the most accomplished Escort Group Commanders in the Battle of the Atlantic.

Introduction

Early in World War II, Germany's vast navy, bolstered by the deadly U-boat 'wolf-packs', was strangling vital shipping lanes between Britain and her allies. In those blackest days the tragic losses in men and ships was tremendously crippling to the British war effort. A proud nation, with a powerful navy that once ruled the waves, was seemingly being brought to her knees. But courageous determination and well-proven traditional naval skills enabled Britain and the Allies gradually to wrest the initiative from the enemy and eventually to overwhelm German naval power. The incredible struggle for supremacy in European seaways, graphically described here in Sea Warfare 1939-45, crucially affected the outcome of the war.

Contents

| | |
|---------------------------------|----|
| A sea war in earnest | 2 |
| Battle in the Atlantic | 14 |
| Fluctuating fortunes in the Med | 22 |
| Action in Arctic waters | 32 |
| Decision in the Atlantic | 42 |
| Victory in the Med | 50 |
| The end of German naval power | 60 |

Picture Credits

Ship profiles in colour: Profile Publications
Ship profiles in black line: A & A Plans
Maps: Richard Natkiel

Photographs

Associated Press, London: 58
Bapti: 4, 8, 12, 28, 33, 38/9, 47
Blitz Publications, London: 9, 13, 16, 21, 43 (inset)
Imperial War Museum, London: 2/3, 5, 6, 10, 11, 14, 18, 22, 25, 26, 27, 29, 31, 35, 38, 42, 44, 46 (bottom), 49, 50, 53, 56, 57, 60, 62/3, 65
National Maritime Museum, London—C. E. Turner: 17
National Maritime Museum, London—Norman Wilkinson: 54/5, 59
Novosti Press Agency, London: 32
US Naval Archives, Washington: 19, 34, 36, 37, 45, 46 (top)